Dear Phyllis,

At the time, close to the open wound, I could not articulate what I was getting from the group, other than communal misery and support and superficial insight. But with time, distance, reflection, and exposure to divorced people who did NOT have this great resource, I have a better handle on how valuable it was to me. To this day I still value the discussions and ideas raised in your divorce-support group. Was it the participants or the caliber of the leader?
